Diver Seeks To Rescue Victims In Sub Disaster

Best In Navy Sent To Scene and Specially Equipped.

SUCCESS DOUBTFUL

Believed Depth Too Great for Diver To Get Results.

BEMBROKE, Wales, July 10.—(AP)—The British submarine L-69 today dived in the vicinity of the sunken H-47 and tried without avail to communicate with the men trapped in the submarine.

The L-69 tried to communicate with the H-47 by means of sound telegraphy, using a bell and the Morse code, but there was no response to the signals.

Diver Bell, reputed to be the best in the navy, was taken from the cruiser "Renown" and equipped with a special German diving suit in which he will try to locate the missing men.

The opinion is held by officials, however that he will be unable to descend to the 330-foot depth in which the H-47 lies, the depth being greater than that anticipated for divers' suit.

Many Hurt In Carolina Crash

Fast Train Derailed and Scores Hurt, Some Seriously.

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C., July 10.—(AP)—From 40 to 60 persons were injured, many seriously, when five cars of north bound fast train No. 84 on the Atlantic Coast Line were derailed two miles north of Enfield, N. C., early today.

Five of the injured, said to be seriously hurt, were brought to the Atlantic Coast Line hospital here and hospital authorities said preparations were being made to care for more.

Four Arkansans Receive Awards

Service To American Red Cross Is Given Recognition.

ST. LOUIS, July 10.—(AP)—Four outstanding bravery, long hours of service or both, four persons in Arkansas have been designated to receive special aid and life saving honors of the American Red Cross.

A. A. Shannon of Dermott, will receive the five-year service medal. Mrs. Mabel Buckley of Fort Smith, will receive the service bar, while Mrs. Murial Woood of Hot Springs will receive the certificate of appreciation. Sam E. Cunningham of Texarkana, will receive the service bar.

In fifteen states comprising the mid-Western division of the Red Cross, 101 persons are to receive medals and awards.

New Bills To Be In Circulation Today

Make Effort To See If Smaller Money Go As Far As Other.

The effort to see if the new small-sized paper money will go as far as the older and larger kind began in Hope at nine o'clock this morning and many an anxious—and proud—owner of a one-dollar William is trying to figure out the result.

The Federal Reserve bank shipped to each of the banks here an allotment of the new currency, based on number of depositors, and other shipments are scheduled to be showing up at regular intervals, consigned to each of the three local institutions.

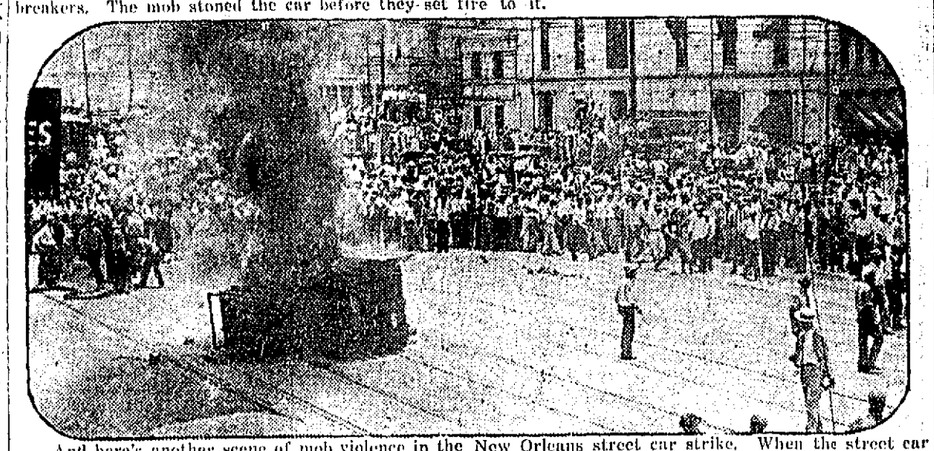

Efforts will be made to distribute the currency in the normal course of business, Roy Anderson, of the Arkansas Bank & Trust Co., said. No hard and fast rules have been laid down, but it is hoped that a general game of "please exchange this for that" will not ensue.

However, for the satisfaction of the public generally, Star announces that it will accept the older currency on subscription just as readily as it will the new. There, there now, don't crowd!

Riots Mark New Orleans Car Strike

Riots broke out along Canal street in New Orleans when striking street car employees wrecked and burned cars operated by non-union men in the heart of th city. Pictured above are hundreds of strikers and sympathizers burning a car which the company had attempted to operate with imported strike-breakers. The mob stoned the car before they set fire to it.

And here's another scene of mob violence in the New Orleans street car strike. When the street car company sent out a repair wagon to pull in a car wrecked by strikers on Canal street, strikers wrecked it and burned it.

Melon Crop Said Largest In Years

Growers Believe New Weight Record Will Be Set This Year.

Melon growers through the Hope territory are of the opinion that the crop this year, both in qunatity and quality, will exceed that of last year by a large margin and confidently expect to witness the smashing of all records in the weight of an individual melon.

Last year the crop was short, there only being some 400 cars averaging 30,000 pounds each, being shipped awmay. That number will be increased by 100 cars this year is the belief of ktose in touch with conditions of the crop.

Home grown melons weighing up to 50 pounds are already on the market, with the larger ones developing rapidly and many express belief that melons touching a scale mark of 150 pounds will be shown here during the year.

Sentenced To Death for Murder of Wife

CHESTER, S. C., July 10. (AP)—Rafe King, 37, was today sentenced by Judge J .K. Henry, in Chester County Criminal Court, to die in the electric chair on Friday, September 20. He was convicted late yesterday of the murder of his wife, Faye Wilson King.

King's attorneys argued a motion for a new trial this morning which was overruled by the court. An appeal will be taken.

Plane Equipped With Desk for Office Work

ST. LOUIS, July 10.—The Mahoney-Ryan Aircraft Corporation here has produced a cabin plane equipped with desk, dictaphone, filing equipment, book-shelves, and all the fittings of an office. The cabin is sound-insulated against the roar of the engine.

A system has been perfected whereby the user of the plane may read his business letter into the dictaphone, and drop the dictaphone records to the ground by small parachutes, to be mailed.

Three of the planes will be built each month.

Foreign Nations Kick On Tariff

Many Complaints Sent To Senate Finance Committee Room.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—(AP)—Combined complaints and protests from 25 foreign nations and colonial possessions bearing on American tariff proposals were made public today by the Senate Finance Committe to which the memoranda had been referred by the state department.

The notes, some emphatic and some couched in mild terms, expressed the opinion of European, South and Central American and individal interests.

They will be considered by the committee which has in charge revision of the house tariff bill.

Slayer of Father To Trial for Crime

Special Term of Court Called To Try 15-Year-Old-Patricide.

PIGGOTT, Ark., July 10.—(AP)—A special term of circuit court was called to convene here July 22 for the trial of George Parker 15-year-old confessed slayer of his father on a first degree murder charge.

The boy was arrested last week following the burning of the Parker farm home and the discovery of the charred body of his father, Whit Parker, in the ruins. The boy confessed, according to Sheriff McNeil, asserting that he shot his father and then poured kerosene "all over everything" and then set fire to it because he had been cussed and threatened.

He has been held in the county jail since his arrest and though there are nine other prisoners the case of the youth is only one to be considered at the special term.

Guernsey 4-H Club To Give Ice Cream Supper

The Guernsey 4-H club will give an ice cream supper at the Guernsey high school building the night of Saturday, July 13, and extend a cordial invitation to the public to attend. Funds derived from the supper will be used in defraying the expenses of club members attending Farmers Week at Fayetteville.

California Endurance Fliers Who Have Established New Worlds' Record

R. B. Reinhart, left, and Loren W. Mendall, right, flying a Buehl airsedan, late Tuesday afternoon made a new world's record for endurance flying and their plane roared steadily on over Culver City, Cal., as they sought to establish a mark of 200 hours aloft. The previous record was 174:0:59, made last week at Cleveland, Ohio, by Red Mitchell and Byron Newcomb.

Record Making Fliers Nearing the 200-Hour Mark In Sustained Flight

CULVER CITY, Cal., July 10. (A. P.)—The ninth day of the record-breaking refueling endurance flight of the Angelino began today when, at 8,29, the ship passed the 193-hour mark. Shortly after eight o'clock a 15-minute contast was made with a refueling plane and 100 gallons of gasoline transferred to the ship which has broken all records for length of time in the air.

Workmen Fall Out In Excessive Heat

Monday and Tuesday Two of Season's Hottest Days Is Report.

Monday and Tuesday afternoons were two of the hottest periods of the year, according to reports from various road camps, gas and phone line headquarters where men were working in the open.

Monday afternoon and again Tuesday men fell out under the blistering sun rays, unable to stand the intense heat. In the local railroad yards where a large crew was unloading gravel the workers began to afll by the wayside early in the afternoon and there was hardly a baker's dozen at five o'clock, quitting time.

A breeze from the northeast Tuesday night, however, brought some relief, and the forecast for tonight shows the temperature a trifle lower than for the preceding two days.

Heat Wave Takes Heavy Human Toll

Death List Steadily Mounts As Mercury Climbs Upward.

NEW YORK, July 10.—(AP)—A mounting death list today marked the continued relentless heat attack from which the whole country has suffered since Sunday. Additional deaths reported were attributed directly to the heat wave, while scores of prostrations and deaths by drownings added to the total.

Four succumbed to heat here yesterday and one at Wilmington, Del. and a total of seven heat fatalities were reported.

Excessively high temperatures prevailed along the Atlantic coast and west as far as the Rockies. Phoeniux, Ariz., held its record of being the hottest spot in the country with a maximum of 110 degrees.

Garrison Named State Health Head In Appointment

Will Be 15th Year Garrison Has Served In Same Capacity.

BOARD VOTE A UNIT

Governor Heeds Wishes of State Board In His Approval.

LITTLE ROCK, July 10.—(AP)—The re-appointment of Dr. C. W. Garrison, as state health officer, a post he has held for 15 years, was approved today by Governor Parnell. The State Board of Health voted unanimously a few days ago for the re-appointment of the present Board hed.

The approval of the appointment by Gov. Parnell was made necessary by an act of the last legislature, which the Governor himself sponsored. It precipitated a bitter fight and led to charges that it was a move on the part of the administration to oust Dr. Garrison from the position.

Before the passage of the act the Board had authority to make its own selection as head of the state health department. Governdor Parnell recommended legislation giving the final word, pointing out that as he was the executive head of the state and responsible for the office he should have a say in who filled it.

The re-appointment was for a four-year term.

Rome Fliers To Complete Voyage

Take Off for Rome, Which Expect To Reach Today.

SANTANDER, Spain, July 10.—(AP)—Unaunted by fatigue and illness, the American aviators, Capt. Lewis Yancey and Roger Q. Williams set out today to conclude a task they could not finish yesterday—the flight from Old Orchard, Me., to Rome.

They lifted their plane from an abandoned field at Albericia, at 1:20 a. m., (5:20 E. S. T.), dipped once in salute and headed east along the 850 mile route to the Italian capital. They hoped it would take less than ten hours to complete the trip and to arrive at Campino, south of the city, before dark.

Many Gate Crashes Ruin Legion Rodeo

ALLIANCE, Neb., July 10.—Too many One-Eyed Connellys caused the Panhandle Stampede, famous rodeo, to be a financial failure this year, an audit of the show sponsored by the American Legion, revealed.

Although the crowds were larger this year than ever before, so many of the spectators sifted into the grounds through the fences, stables and stock gates that the usual amount of receipts was not collected. The night pageant, a beautiful spectacle, was also a financial loss on account of cold nights and wind.

May Largest Month In Tuberculin Work

Tests During Month Exceed By 100,000 Any Month Since '17.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—(AP)—More tuberculosis tests were applied to cattle in connection with the co-operative tuberculosis eradication wrok in May than ni any other previous month, according to a report issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

During May, 94,517 herds, comprising 1,193,660 cattle were given tuberculin tests, exceeding by more than 100,000 tests the number for any month since 1917, when the work began.

The official smumary shows also that 719 counties have been designated as modified accredited areas, indicating practical freedom from bovine Tuberculosis. In addition, 30 towns ni Vermont have been so designated.

The largest number of cattle tested during May was in Wisconsin—150,394. Minnesota was second with 147,119.

The large volume of testing apparently wil continue, the report stated, since more than 2,000,000 cattle rae at present on the waiting list to be tested.

Holding to the Martineau Law

A LETTER which Dwight H. Blackwood wrote to citizens of Mississippi county, his home community, when they were demanding new road construction, is interesting in view of the fact that the Martineau highway program is now in its third year. If the State Highway Commission were disposed to depart from the terms of the act, the departure might be expected in the home counties of the commissioners. Yet we read in the Blytheville Courier News the following from Mr. Blackwood's letter:

"If the construction of a gravel road, such as we contemplate, is not satisfactory . . . then I shall recommend to the Commission that we discontinue our plans for the construction of this road and let the matter drop.

"The (Martineau) Act specifically provides that new construction shall begin in the non-bonded and lightly-bonded sections until the State Highway System is brought to a parity—Mississippi county, under our parity allotment is entitled to $3,190,575.74, and against this the state assumed payment of road improvement district obligations of $6,549,383.17, as of January 1, 1927. This alone shows an overdraft of $3,400,000 and in my opinion Mississippi county is very fortunate indeed to get one mile of construction in this program."

Hempstead, a moderately bonded county, will be interested in the statement by the Commission chairman—because if the Commission stands pat on refusing new construction to the three or four counties which already have overdrafts, it appears that there will be money to spend in the unbonded and lightly-bonded counties, which was the purpose and intent of the Martineau act.

Another basic policy of the Commission is revealed in a letter written The Star by Justin Matthews, commissioner for this district.

"Each community," he writes, "needs trade territory roads but with our present population we can never hope to have more than 300,000 cars. We now have 222,000.

"Three hundred thousand cars will never build and maintain the roads that Arkansas needs. The only way to increase our road revenue, in my opinion is to build our through roads as high type roads which is necessary in order to attract tourist travel. A certain percentage of these tourists seeing our cheap lands, bountful rainfall and mild climate will buy lands here and become citizens of Arkansas. They in turn will own cars. If we can gain a million in population it will be a class of people who will own cars; therefore we could expect 600,000 care with an increase of a million in population.

"Six hundred thousand cars would give us sufficinet revenue to build and maintain a wonderful state highway system as well as the lateral roads, but if we do not get our through roads first then we will never get our increase in population and will have the necessary road revenue."

Science Aids Farmer

SCIENCE, rather than legislators, must be depended upon to aid in solving the farm problem, according to Louis J. Taber, head of the National Grange and one of the outstanding farm leaders of the United States.

In a recent address he enumerated some of the ways in which chemists are always assisting agriculture, and in which even greater aid may be expected in the future—such as finding new uses for farm products, developing cheaper plant foods, devising more effective methods of fighting insects pests, and utilizing material now considered worthless.

The skeptcism regarding the benefits of farm relief legislation hinted at by Mr. Tabor is shared by many econonad other earnest students of the farm problem. Even with the $500,000,000 authorized by the new farm bill, any farmer who believes that this alone will put him on the road to prosperity is due for a disappointment.

In the last analysis the farmer's future is largely in his own hands. The adoption of improved methods, with better planning, and a determination to raise his own food and stocg feed at home are among the means which he may employ for bettering of conditions. All the legislation which might be passed will not help the farmer who does not diligently try to help himself.

Sit Down—You're Rocking the Boat!

WASHINGTON LETTER

By Rodney Dutcher

WASHINGTON—One thing the special session of Congress has demonstrated is that the women members are standing more and more on their own feet. Widowhood becomes less and less a requirement for entry.

Emphasis to these facts has been provided especially by the ladies known s the "The Ruths," Mrs. McCormack of Illinois, Mrs. Owen of Florida and Mrs. Pratt of New York.

Observation of these ladies in action leads inescapably to the conclusion that the number of congresswomen will increase gradually and that it is no great jump for prominent women already actually engaged in public life. Jeanette Rankin, the first congresswoman was not a widow, and there is every reason to believe that there will be many more single ladies along.

Didn't Need Her Husband

Before the "Three Ruths" came here there was but one congresswoman whose husband had not preceded her in the House. That was Mrs. Mry Norton of New Jersey, who for years before her election had served actively in Democratic state politics and whose husband is a business man. Mrs. Katherine Langley of Kentucky was no wdiow, either, but she had succeeded her husband when his seat was vacated by his sentence to the Atlanta Penitentiary.

The widows of Congress, of course, have given satisfaction to their constitutents and seem likelyto reman here indefinitely, except for Mrs. Pearl Oldfield, who is understood to plan to retire. One only points out that the deaths of their husbands presented an opportunity for coming here which they would not otherwise have had and so considerably swelled the number of women members in the last Congress.

Of the "Three Ruths," Mrs. Pratt is the only one whose husband or father did not make a name for himself in national politics. Mrs. Pratt turned to politics on her own. She had several children, but was wealthy enough to afford the time. She became an associate Republican leader in the Fifteenth Assembly district of New York City and in 1925 became the first woman to be elected to the New York Board of Aldermen. As an Alderman—or alderwoman — she served with distinction and her voice was heard frequently.

In the few short weeks wherein she has had an opportunity to show her stuff in Washington, the New York Ruth has distinguished herself principlly by her fight against the increase in the sugar tariff as proposed in the bill passed by the House.

"The sugar industry in this country cannot possibly expand to a point where it can begin to supply our needs," she says. "The cane growers are limited by climate and the beet growers by the employment problem."

Mrs. McCormick is the daughter of Mark Hanna and the widow of the late Senator Medill McCormick. and Mrs. Owen is the daughter of Willim Jennings Bryan, but although both have long been identified by the relationships neither is here on that basis. Both went out and won nomination and election on their own merits. Neither stepped into a husband's or a father's seat. Both are capable women and both were in public life long before they ran for Congress. Now each is standing on her own feet and neither is known first of all as the daughter of Hanna or Bryan.

DOUGLAS McLEAN TALKS IN NEW KIND OF COMEDY

Action plus is featured in the latest Douglas MacLean Paramount-Christie production netitled "The Carnation Kid" now showing at the Saenger theatre. The film rolls along in a rapid fire manner that is sure to elicit thrills from all who see it.

The story is from an original one written for MacLean by Alfred A. Cohen who has written several screen successes and he has injected plenty of action and pep into the script.

MacLean portrays the role of an innocent and quite harmless typewriter salesman who is inadvertant up thrust in the midst of a gangsters feud and political war. He finds himself the leading figure of the controversy by virtue of mistaken dientity, all of which contributes to mirthful and at times thrilling dramatic screen fare.

The popular star has been given an outstanding supporting cast in his new picture which includes such well known screen characters as, Frances Lee, Loraine Eddy, William B. Davidson, Francis McDonald, Charles Mailes and others.

Miss Lee was recently elevated to complete stardom by Paramount Christie and has delighted countless fans and has delighted countless fans with her work in the "Confessions of a Chorus girl" series. MacLean's histronic ability needs no introduction to film fans, and hte present film has been pronounced the best of his carreer to date.

Lorraine Eddy is another beautiful Paramount-Christie girl who has been given the opportunity to go in for heavy dramatics, and her performances has been praised by film critics. Francis McDonald, the suave gangster in the film will be remembered for his work in "The Legion of the Condemned," Paramount's aviation success. William Davidson and Charles Mailes are both well known stage and screen dramatic artists.

Sedgwick Players In Another Pleasing Hit

"Up In Mabel's Room" was the Sedgwick Players ofering last night at their tent theatre on South Elm, and you may know now that "Mabel and Garry," who in every-day life are Miss Lorain and Mr. Fletcher, had one large evening. Miss Lorain is clever—and Mr. Fletcher didn't leave any of his ability at home.

In fact, the two combined, with able assistance from the entire cast, put on a pleasing, the second of their stay. Mr. Sedgwick, manager, had stated his show was different—and it is. Costuming, scenery and light effects are are far superior to average expectation—and the music? Well, that deserves a paraghaph to itself!

The orchestra is one of the best ever appearing here, including in its membership artists know throughout the country for rare ability and musical talent. A number of good voices are to be heard as well, and wide by large it's a good show.

Tonight the troupe presents "Married and How!" a stage knock out that set em talking on old Broadway. Special musical numbers and between the acts vaudeville.

THIS HAS HAPPENED

Iris Morgan, wife of John Curtis Morgan, successful lawyer, deserts him for Bert Crawford, a chilly friend, whom Morgan never suspects. Nan Carroll, Morgan's secretary, is deeply in love with Morgan and saves him from utter dispair by cleverly forcing him into his work. For 6 months she acts as long distance housekeeper for him, winning the love of his child, little six-year-old Curtis Morgan.

Morgan breaks the news to her that he is divorcing Iris and stressing his and Curtis' need for her, asks her to marry him. She consents. Their farcial marriage has continued three months when Iris, jilted by Crawford, returns.

Feigning illness, she tries to bring the bewildered Morgan to his knees. Nan, crushed, determines to fight and asks the doctor to remove Iris to a hospital. Curtis, who sees his mother daily becomes ill as a result of the forbidden sweets she gives him. He wakes up Christmas morning with an attack of appendicitis. Morgan brings Willis Todd, a former suitor of Nan's to Christmas dinner. In spite of the strained atmosphere they spend a happy Christmas While Morgan is in the capital on business the maid telephones Nan that Iris is stripping the house of her things and is moving into a cottage across the street.

By all sorts of pretexts she summons Morgan to her while Nan looks on brokenhearted. Curtis, whom Iris continues to feed sweets becomes ill again. Nan is frantic and desperately goes to Morgan to insist that he command Iris to stop feeding Curtis or to put an end to the child's visits to his mother.

The doctor says his appendix is ruptured and preparations are made to operate on him there at once. Thus Iris returns to the home she had deserted.

Now Go On With the Story

CHAPTER XLVII

If she could have done anything to help Nan could better have endured those two hours that elapsed between the arrival of the surgeon Dr. Drew, and the appearance from the kitchen of the wheeled stretcher with its still, blanket-wrapped burden. But even Dr. Black, her champion and friend, brusquely ordered her from the kitchen which had been turned into an operating room. It was already crowded with himself, the surgeon, the anesthetician and the nurse. Science was in charge; love could avail Curtis nothing now.

And so the desolate girl wandered from room to room, feeling more like that outcast spirit in "Tomlinson," of which Kipling writes: "The wind that blows between the Worlds," it nipped him to the bone," than like a human being. For in this hour of hovering death she was indeed an outcast. It was not delicacy entirely, which forebad her to obtrude her own anxiety and grief upon that of the father and mother. It was, rather, a desolate conviction that they would grant her no right to grieve with them. Iris herself could not have devised a more terrible punishment for the interloper she hated.

But Iris and John Morgan were wndering distractedly about the house, too, and it was not always easy for Nan to keep her small person out of their sight. Two or three times it seemed to Nan that John was looking for her, that his tragic eyes, when, by accident, she was forced to meet them were praying to her for comfort and reassurance. But Iris clung to his rm moaning weeping, or hysterically justifying herself for her undoubted responsibility for the child's condition.

Not even the shadow of death however, had dimmed Iris' beauty. As she walked the floors with her husband, the drapes of her chartreuse chiffon negligee fluttered enchantingly about her tall, slim body—if there had been anybody to observe and be enchanted. Twice Nan saw her dab at her cheeks with a powder puff; once, even s she hiccuped her grief, she made up her quivering mouth with a gernium lipstick.

It was Nan, not Iris, who remember to make up Curtis little bed with fresh linens and blankets; Nan who had the presence of mind to place three hot water bottles between the sheets as a precaution against post-operative pneumonia. But when that small service was done, there was nothing to do but wait and weep inward tears of agony which her hot eyes refused to shed.

She was in the library, trying desperately to focus her mind on the Blackhull case. so that the waiting might not be so unbearable long, when faint sounds told her that the operation was over and that the boy was to be taken to his room. She crept out, trembling so violently that each step was an effort.

"Is he—?" she heard her husband's almost unrecognbzia olied band's almost unrecognizable voice croak.

"He's still allve. That's all I can say now," Dr. Black answered brusquely from behind the yellowish-muslin mask he wore.

* * *

The slow precession began the difficult negotaltion of the stairs. Morgan and Iris, the latter sobbing convulsively, brought up its rear, and Nan sunk into a little huddle in the hall, unnoticed until Maude O'Brien found her there and administered to her.

At 3 o'clock Dr. Drew went home, satisfeld that the operation was "successful," no matter what its outcome, and leaving Dr. Black and the trained nurse in charge.

"Please, Dr. Drew—" Nan dared to stop him at the front door. "Will he—live?"

"Who are you?" the surgeon demanded curtly, beetling his whitish eyebrows and regarding her with frosty blue eyes.

"I'm—Mr. Morgan's— wife," Nan brought out the words jerkily.

"Then who is the beauty in green? I thought she was the boy's mother."

"She is," Nan answered dully. Why try to explain?

"I—see Odd triangle," the surgean commented. "Well, young lady, I can't tell you whether the child will live or not. If peritonitis doesn't set in—as it probably will—he has an even chance" His frosty eyes softened a bit at sight of her profound misery. "You look all in. child. Better go to bed There's nothing you can do—nothing anyone except the nurse can do now"

Nan did not take his advice. Twice, before dawn, she crept to the door of Curtis' room, opened it noiselessly and peeped in. And both times she saw the father and mother kneeling at the bedside. their eyes fixed upon the white, unconscious face of their son. Nan did not enter. At 6 o'clock she went down to the kitchen and prepared breakfast for the watchers. Her hands shook as she set the table for two—Iris and John Morgan. The nurse would want hers on a tray Nan decided, so that she should not have to leave the unconscious boy for a moment.

Maude O'Brien had gone back to bed, and Estelle, who "lived out," had not yet arrived. It was Nan, therefore who summoned her husband and his former wife to the meal she had prepared for them.

"But there are only two places. Aren't you going to eat, Nan?" Morgan asked, his weary voice whipping itself to what sounded like genuine solicitude.

"I—ate in the kitchen," Nan answered.

"Imagine eating at a time like this," Iris sighed, as she settled in her chair, amid a flutter of draperies.

"You must try to eat, to keep up your strength, darling," Morgan urged, and Nan knew that the old, familiar endearment had slipped out unconsciously. Not that it mattered now.

"I suppose I must, Jack," Iris agreed, with a forlorn catch in her lovely voice. Then, with a tearful rush of words: "Oh, Jack darling, to think it took this to bring us together again!"

* * *

Nan did not wait to hear Morgan's answer. She fled, her hand pressed against her heart. It did matter still! Oh, it did! But she remembered her childish promise to God to give this man up to this woman if He would only spare Curtis' life. And she would keep that promise regardless of what it cost her.

For two interminable hours she lay on her bed, her body taut, every nerve listening. The nurse had promised to call her if there was any change. At half past 8 she rose, took a cold shower, and dressed in office clothes. There had still been no word from the nurse, but as she emerged from her own door she saw Miss Powers tiptoeing out of Curtis' room.

"Any—change, Miss Powers?" Nan whispered.

"Yes. He's come out from the ether, Mrs. Morgan, but he's too weak to talk," the nurse answered. "Dr. Black is keeping his fingers on his pulse. The action is—very faint."

"Then—you think—?"

"No one can tell yet," the nurse answered in her kind, cheerfully sympathetic voice. "If he rallies from the shock of the operation and peritonitis doesn't set in—" She hesitated, then continued frankly: "It will be several hours yet, Mrs. Morgan, before we can definitely hope; that is, if he—"

"If he doesn't die in the meantime, she means," Nan forced herself to complete the nurse's ominous sentence. Aloud she said, quietly: "Miss Powers, will you please ask my husband to come to me? He's with Curtis isn't he?"

In spite of the coffee he had drunk, the man who joined Nan in the hall looked almost as deathlike as the child who lay in the room beyond.

Nan went at once to the point No use to express sympathy now "I'm going to the courthouse, John, and take your place today. We can't ask for an adjournment, and if we delay putting Nina Blackhull on the stand, she may seize the opportunity to leave the country."

Morgan stared at her as if he did not know what she ws talking about. Then, with the gesture which his troubles had made familiar to Nan, he passed his hand cross his eyes. "I'd—forgotten about the trial, Nan. I'll—go."

"No. Curtis— You must be here until—" Nan floundered. Then more steadily, "You are going to stay here John. I can examine Nina Bluckhull, even if I have never appeared before the bar, I'm qualified, you know—"

"Yes," Morgan agreed. "And you know as much about this case as I do. You'll take those questions we drafted last night?"

"Of course. And I'll try to do you credit, John. Please trust me."

"You—oh, God bless you, Nan!" He took her hands and bowed his face upon them for an instant. They cme away wet with his tears.

Probably because the Blackhull case had sunk almost to insignificance in comparison with the impending tragedy in her own home, Nan faced the court calmly, unfraid. Her one thought was to have done this business, creditably, of course, and to get back to Curtis.

She put the prearranged questions to Nina Blackhull, widow of the man for whose murder his son was on trial; put them calmly, but her great, tired brown eyes blazed with a fire that seemed to wither the beautiful young witness, who, Nan was convinced, had actually planned the murder, the execution of which she had left to her lover, the chauffeur, Bassett.

At the third question, put in Nan's even voice, terrifying in its very calmness, the woman in the witness box suddenly sprang to her feet, her hands warding off the girl lawyer as if she were infected with some terrible plague.

"Quit looking at me like that!" Nana Blackhull screamed. "I didn't do it. I tried to keep Ernest Bassett from killing my husband! I swear I did! I swer it! And now he's double-crossed me! He's trying to put the blame on me—"

That was almost the end, of course. Somehow Nan managed to get through the necessary formalities—the resting of the defense; a motion for the quashing of the indictment against David Blackhull, which was of course, denied until Nina Blackhull's amazing halfconfession could be corroborated. the congratulations of Judge Bonce and even of District Attorney Brainerd, who was ready to admit defeat. Press photographers caught snapshots of the "girl lawyer" as she hurried frantically down the courthouse steps and as she sprang into her car parked at the curb.

So extreme was her anviety for Curtis that she had forgotten the courtroom drama before she arried at her home. But evidently John Curtis Morgan had had room in his heart for both his child and his wife. for his first question was:

"How did you get along, Nan? I've been ashamed of myself for letting you face that ordeal alone."

"Nina Blackhull confessed—practically—to conspiracy, and incriminated Bassett?" Nan answered impatiently. But—how is Curtis?"

"He's holding his own—is stronger, if anything, than Dr. Black expected," Morgan answered, his deep voice shaking with joy. "We—we can hope now. Nan."

And Nan's own relief and joy were so overwhelming that it did not occur to her to resent her husband's failure to congratulate her on the amazing outcome of her first appearance before the bar.

It was three full days, however, before hope settled into virtual certaintly that little Curtis Morgan would recover. And during those strained days of watching and waiting and praying, Nan Morgan found herself reduced to the status of housekeeper for Iris Morgan. Arrogant with the victory she believed she had won, Iris a servant. And whenever Morgan was in the house. which was most of the time, Iris was with him, playing superbly the role of anxious mother and wronged though forgiving wife.

So hard to bear where the humiliations which Iris. unknown to Morgan, inflicted upon her, that Nan at last found herself almost glad to keep the promise she had made: to leave Iris in possession of husband and child, if Curtis' life was spared.

DEADLY GASES GIVEN OFF BY ICING PLANTS

Chicagoans Alarmed Over Dangerous Conditions Existing Apartment Houses.

15 ARE KILLED BY FUMES

Methyl Chloride Gas and Sulphur Dioxide Among Chemicals Threatening to Life.

CHICAGO, July 2.—(AP)—Health Commissioner Arnold Kegel tonight said that five types of refrigerators of the 22 leading brands on the market use the deadly methyl chloride gas, seven use the less dangerous sulphur dioxide gas and the remainder use either ammonia, least dangerous because of its odorous warning, or brine, which is virtually harmless.

An investigation of the various gases used, Dr. Kegel said, has been under way for the past three months and upwards of 15 deaths have been attributed to the lethal gas, while 'several more' deaths can be investigated with the view establishing definitely the causes.

The individual home unit refrigerators were given a clear bill by the health commissioner, because, he said the pressure is seldom high enough to cause a fatality, even in the event of a leaky connection. The apartment house systems, operating from a central unit, however, were considered greater dangers by Dr. Kegel, because of the pressure required and the distance the gas is piped.

'Our investigation,' Dr. Kegel said, 'shows five of the leading brands using the methyl chloride gas. This is the most dangerous of all methods, and is used because of the economy of installation. This has the lowest boiling point and works under less pressure than the other agents.

"Under a pressure of 15 to 20 pounds this gas may be used and because of the low pressures involved certain economies are effected in the installation. Other processes require tubing capable of sustaining 150 and 200 pounds pressure, the pressures under which the various agents react," Dr. Kegel said.

Discussing the second gas, sulphur dioxide, Dr. Kegel said this process was used in seven of the 22 boxes checked. This gas, while poisonous in large or concentrated quantities, is easily detected and the danger minimized, the health commissioner said.

"Sulphur dioxide," he said, 'is one of the agents requiring greater pressure. It would be dangerous in large doses, but an odor similar to that of bad eggs gives warning that gas is escaping.

Asked how the dangers might be minimized, Dr. Kegel said well ventilated rooms and particularly kitchens where refrigerators are in operation would lessen the dangers greatly.

Proper supervision even of the units using the methyl gas virtually would eliminate all dangers, he said.

Which Do You Choose? ICE

That is SAFE, SURE, SIMPLE, SUFFICIENT

Or Ice Machines

THAT ARE UNCERTAIN, COSTLY, LIMITED?

Ice Is Always Safe

Fifteen lives were snuffed out in Chicago by the gases produced by the electric refrigerators. Few persons know anything about the gas-forming chemicals used in such machines.

The gas-forming chemicals, absolutely essential to the operation of the machines cannot always be depended upon to remain within the ice machine.

The escape of such chemical fumes, will invariably contaminate food stored in the refrigerator, and will endanger the members of the family exposed to them.

Arguments as to the desirability and safety of ice and ice refrigerators are absolutely superflous. They are known to all.

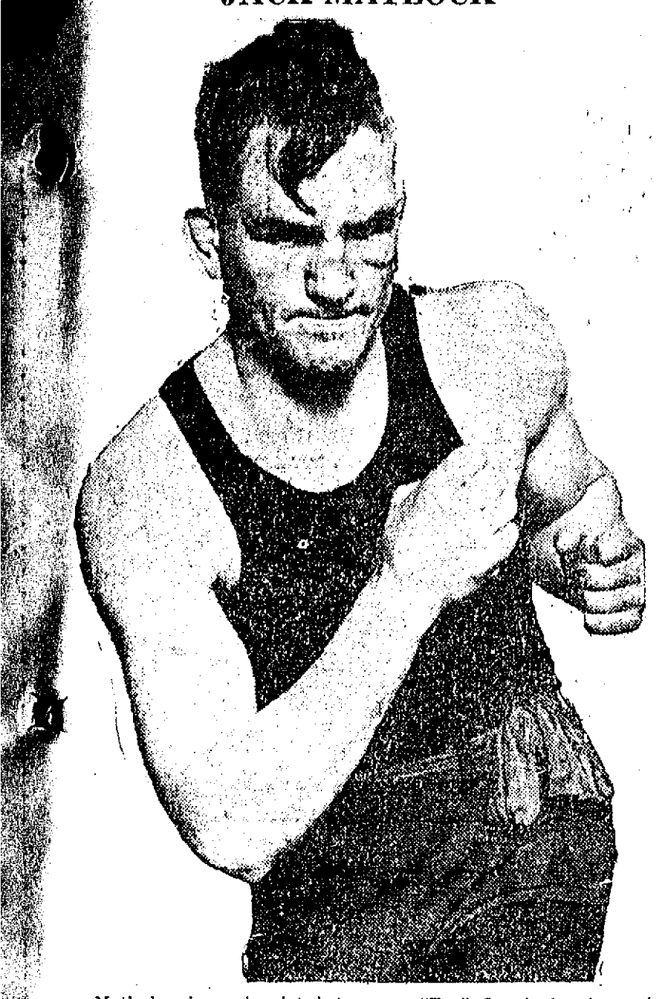

Ice has proven itself, through all time as the one safe preservative of food, the protector of health. It is available at all times. Use it freely.

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS — A Sight! — By Blosser

HOOKS AND SLIDES
By Henry L. Farrell

Dear Columbia Must Be Good

Columbia's victory on the Hudson even under conditions that might be called flukey, marked it as a great crew. One of the best of the very fine crews that have been turned out in American colleges since the war.

The first of the super-crews turned out since that period was the Navy crew of 1920 coached by Pop Glendon and his son, Rich, the coach of the champion Columbia navy. The 1920 Navy crew swept all the American waters and then went to Brussels as the American Olympic crew and beat the Leander club of England in one of the greatest races that ever was rowed.

Let 'Em Lead a While

The midshipmen and their coach knew that England had a great crew. It was composed of the best oarsmen from Orford and Cambridge. When the Navy went out on the Brussels canal for the final heat Pop Glendon told Clyde King, the stroke and the coxswain, to let the English crew lead for three-quarters and then jump 'em.

The crews were so closely matched in size and time that the race should have been even money but we Americans had to bet three to one to get any takers.

When the time came for the race we boarded a Navy automobile that was allowed by the gendarmes to travel along the tow path along the side of the canal.

Jack Says Don't Worry

Jack Kelley, who had just won the sculling championship and the doubles with his cousin, Paul Costello was sitting on the running board.

He had bet $500 for the members of the crew and $200 for himself. The other members of the party had bet their whole bank rolls also. Kelly had heard Pop Glendon tell the the crew to take the jump at the three-quarters. And he wasn't worried in the early part of the race. Commander Mayo and some of the Navy officers in the car were worried, however.

"Wait till we get to the three-quarters and then watch us go," Kelly said. When the three-quarters was reached King jumped his stroke and the English stroke jumped his and kept right with him. It was a superb race but within a hundred yards of the finish the English crew collapsed almost as a unit and the Navy won by two lengths.

A Lesson In Training

And Old Pop Glendon said: "That's what you get for training on champagne and beer."

Other Great Ones

The next super-crew was the Yale crew of 1924 which carried the American colors to the Olympic games in Paris and won the championship. Then came the Columbia crew of 1927 and the great California crew of 1928 which went to Amsterdam to win the Olympic championship. And now the Columbia crew of 1929.

But Navy Best

There is plenty of room for arguments about which one of these crews was the greatest, but we always have looked upon that Navy crew, captained by Eddie Graves, as the greatest crew we ever have seen.

And Jack Kelly, the greatest sculler of our day, votes the same way.

Promoters Bite Off Large Chew When Matching Matlock-Lavell

Heavyweights Demand and Will Receive More Money Than Ever Paid Fighters Appearing Here—Really A Big Time Proposition.

Promoters Robbins and Russell bit off considerable of a chunk when they stepped out to sign Jack Matlock and Tex Lavell for a 10-round bout here Thursday night. For these two heavyweights are not of the "small town" type, being rather well known in Fistiana circles and able to command real money when they step into the ring.

The only thing making it at all their first and only meeting, that each had received a raw decision when the bout was called a draw. Each unhesitatingly declares fighting the other is no funny job—no half-holiday to be lightly undertaken—and that his personal preference would be to use a brick or a baseball bat.

Each of the two boxers made concessions in amount of cash in signing up, but when Leo Robins figured up the cash outlay, rain or whine, he gasped like he'd plunged into ice water. But he was already hooked and it was just a case of staying there and pitch.

That's what he is doing and fans Thursday night will have occasion to be glad he did, for this heavy bout is in a class by itself in southwest Arkansas boxing history.

BRUSHING UP SPORTS — By Lander

ON the night of July 18, Tommy Loughran, light heavyweight champion of the world will once again drag his shopworn crown into the ring when he meets James J. Braddock, the rock fisted New Jersey sharpshooter.

Loughran, the boxer against Braddock, the dynamite puncher—that one should hold enough possibilities to assemble quite a mob of the blood-thirsty and with the moderate prices in effect for this one, the Yankee Stadium should be well filled when the fighters step through the ropes. The possibility of seeing a title lifted with the old K. O. generally brings them out en masse.

Braddock, the challenger has come fast during the past 12 months. Only a year ago, he was in the camp of Tom Heeney, then prepping for his fight with Gene Tunney. He labored as an ordinary sparring partner and little had been heard of him outside of the New York and New Jersey district.

Since then his heavy right hand has accounted for knockout victories over Tuffy Griffiths, Pete Latzo and Jimmy Slattery. These wins brought him acclaim in all regions where the noble business of ear scrambling holds forth.

He is young and ambitious and he can shoot a nasty right hand. He may lack boxing skill and experience but if he nails Tommy on the mandible, the king will go down. And maybe for the 10 seconds' nap.

Loughran is confident he can turn James J. back. He banks on his ring science and experience to whip the kid. Whatever may be your opinion of Tommy, you'll have to hand him these two qualities. He may be dangling on the pugilistic parachute but he still has the habit of getting the decision. And until the 18th of July he'll still be the champion.

YOU FEEL ITS AGILITY.....

As active and as responsive as a cat---that's the way you can make your car by using ESSO, the super-power fuel.

Putting ESSO into the tank is like adding two cylinders to the motor. It makes a four perform like a six. It makes any car---old or new---more agile and flexible. Gives it more power, speed, and smoother operation, and eliminates fuel knocks.

Enables you to take in high the hills, when with other fuels, you have to shift gear. When ESSO is in the tank, you can feel the difference. That's why increasing thousands are using it. Ask any "Standard" Dealer.

They're Going To Try To Beat The Record of The Robert E. Lee!

With "Five cents in cash and a billion dollars in honor" as the stakes, two wealthy sportsmen plan a speedboat race up the Mississippi river from New Orleans to St. Louis in an effort to beat the record of the famous old river steamboat Robert E. Lee, which has stood for 40 years. They are shown below, Dr. Louis LeRoy of Memphis, left and Captain George M. Cox, to New Orleans.

Fast Speedboats Plan Race Up Mississippi

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—The classic race between the Mississippi river steamers Robert E. Lee and Natchez—perhaps the most famous sporting event in American history—is going to be run all over again, with trim white motorboats taking the place of the luxurious packets and a stake of one ordinary nickle replacing the $5000 side bet of the original event.

Two Men—George M. Cox of New Orleans and Dr. Louis LeRoy of Memphis—plan to duplicate the 1250-mile race from New Orleans to St. Louis.

They will try to beat one another, of course; but even more will they try to beat the mark set by the Robert E. Lee—90 hours and 3 minutes for more than a thousand miles of upstream driving, or better than 14 miles an hour.

That mark has stood since 1870. No modern craft has ever been able to beat the speed of the most famous boat that ever steamed the mississippi.

May Start July 18

The present race, which is due to start at New Orleans about July 18, was arranged in much the same manner as the first one.

Cox, a New Orleans manufacturer and sportsman, has just built a magnificent 57-foot power yacht. Dr. LeRoy, owner of a speedy motor craft that is somewhat smaller, tried to beat the record a year ago and failed. This year he installed new motors, planning to try again.

One day the two met.

"I hear," said Cox, "that you're going to try to beat the record of the Robert E. Lee."

"I'm going to do it," replied Dr. LeRoy, confidnetly.

"Well, doctor," returned Cox, "how about a race?"

"Fine," said Dr. LeRoy. "And how about the stakes?"

Said Cox:

"We'll make it for five cents in cash and a billion dollars in honor."

So the race was arranged.

It will be a strenuous event. Driving a boat for 250 miles against the Mississippi's tricky current, through daylight and darkness and past treacherous sandbars and towheads for more than four days is no picnic. And there are plenty of people alnog the rive—especial-betting that neither boat will touch the Lee's great record.

The Lee and the Natchez raced ly the oldtime rivermen—who are when steamboating was in its heyday, before the railroads had replaced the great floating palaces.

Captain John W. Cannon, owner and master of the Lee, escountered Captain Thomas P. Leathers, owner-master of the Natchez, in the bar of the old St. Charles hotel in New Orleans in June of 1870. The two men got into a friendly argument over which had the fastest boat.

The bar was full of river men, and sides were taken. Soon it became obvious that only a race could settle matters. A side bet of $5000 was agreed upon and June 30 was set for the date.

All up and down the river the race was the one topic of conversation. Many there were who believed the Natchez to be the better boat but the Lee was a sentimental favorite on account of its name—it was only five years after the close of the Civil war.

Many thousands of dollars were bet on the outcome; planters were known to wager their entire plantations. Even the negro roustabouts put up bets. There wasn't a neutral between the gulf and St. Louis.

River Classic to Be Run for a 5-cent Bet

Then came the race. For hour after hour the big steamboats tore up the river, smoke belching from their tall stacks. At every city and town crowds lined the waterfront to see them. At Memphis more than 25,000 pepole waited on the levee.

The Robert E. Lee reached Memphis a mile in the lead. And then the foresight of her skipper, Capt. Cannon, came into play. He had arranged by telegraph to have coal barges and tugs waiting, and as he came abrast of the city—to the tune of a terrific chorus of whistles, booming of cannon and loud cheers—tugs towed the barges out to meet him and he refuled without stopping his boat.

Capt. Leathers hadn't thought of that. He had to stop to refuel, and he never made up the lost half hour or more.

Furniture is Fuel

Before he reached Memphis Capt. Leathers' coal was gone. He made the last dozen miles burning furniture, stateroom fittings, sides of bacon and anything else he could find.

The Lee reached St. Louis on July 4, nearly an hour ahead of the Natchez. Some rivermen maintanied that the race had been won by Capt. Cannon's foresight, and that the Natchez was really the faster boat; but the victory was a popular one, and the two steamers never raced again. Each one, as it happened, was destroyed by fire not long after.

Now, the 40-year-old record is in danger. Dr. LeRoy's craft, the Bogie, is a speedy boat; and Cox's new boat, the Martha Jane, has $10,000 worth of new motors in her engine room. Each man is determined to win, willing to rick wrecking his boat or burning up the engines in the attempt.

Cox's yacht has passenger accommodations, and 12 men will be aboard. Among them will be W. K. Henderson, famous as the owner of raido station KWKH, at Shreveport, La., Henderson plans to broadcast the race direct from the yacht.

Sworn to conceal his means of livelihood even from members of his own family, he will contrive to gain entrance into those undercover groups in which betrayal of secrets means swift death—the gangs, whose activities, menacing and baffling, lurk behind the murder of a Frankie Yale or a Frank Marlow.

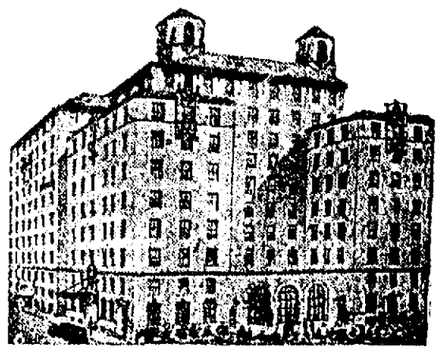

It is noticeable that folks who talk so confidently about going to heaven never seem to be in any hurry to start.

It takes a lot of practice to make a saxophone do its worst.

Stingy people spoil their vacations by worrying over the cost.

Anti-Monkey Law Construed At Last

"It Do But It Don't" Is Boiled Down Text Of Opinion.

LITTLE ROCK, July 10. (AP)—An opinion issued from Attorney General Norwood's office today held that teaching in the public schools of Arkansas that "man ascended or decended from a lower order of animals" was prohibited under the state's anti-evolution law, but there was nothing to prohibit the teaching that "man ascended or decended from a lower order of mankind."

Reduced to its final analysis, said the opinion, the state law merely prohibits the teaching of the atheistical doctrine that man ever was, under any curcumstances, anything but a man.

The opinion was prepared by John H. Caldwell, assistant attorney general, for a determination of whether the text book "The Tree-Dwellers" could be used in the schools of Stuttgart. O. C. Harve, Baptist preacher at Stuttgart, had asked the opinion.

The state's anti-evolution law was an initiation measure passed at the last general election.

Tipples Being Repaired As Step Toward Re-Opening Diggings.

BONANZA, Ark., July 10. (AP)—Repairs are being made today on the tipple at the Rhinehart-Barr Coal Company's mine near here where a strike of 75 miners has been in progress for two days.

The mine will not be ready for operations before early next week, officials said. They would not indicate whether all striking miners would return but stated some of the men were at work repairing the tipples.

Scotland Yard Methods In U. S.

New York To Adopt Plan Which Has Made British Famous.

NEW YORK, July 10.—(AP)—Over fifty young men, recruits all, picked for their "youth, intelligence and fearlessness" were designated Tuesday by Police Commissioner Whalen fro a new job, one colored with romance and shadowed by ever present danger—the secret police.

To be known henceforth only by numbers, they form the nucleus of New York's "Scotland Yard."

He will travel alone, this secret servcie man, unarmed and without badge, down dark alleys and into strange dives in the mazes of the underworld.

In the unenviable position of spy he will fraternize with gangsters, rum runners, narcotic peddlers and desperate characters generally.
